the campo indian landfill war explores the timely and controversial topic of environmental justice through the story of an indian tribe s struggle to develop its isolated and impoverished reservation by building a commercial garbage facility to serve the cities of southern california the environmental justice movement was born out of the conviction that the waste industry has targeted minority communities for facilities it can no longer locate in the backyards of those with greater access to political power the campo case is therefore an anomaly the tribe is unified in supporting the landfill while the project is opposed by their mostly white neighbors out of concern that it could contaminate the aquifer that is the sole source of drinking water for 400 square miles and thereby render the entire region uninhabitable the environmental justice community including many indians charges that the waste industry is trying to exploit the poverty of the campos and other tribes making them offers they can t refuse for projects no one else wants projects no one should want the campos admit the danger of exploitation but contend that it is paternalistic indeed racist to assume that indians are not smart enough to protect themselves in dealings with whites or wise enough to guard their reservation environment during the nineteenth century british and american settlers acquired a vast amount of land from indigenous people throughout the pacific but in no two places did they acquire it the same way stuart banner tells the story of colonial settlement in australia new zealand fiji tonga hawaii california oregon washington british columbia and alaska today indigenous people own much more land in some of these places than in others and certain indigenous peoples benefit from treaty rights while others do not these variations are traceable to choices made more than a century ago choices about whether indigenous people were the owners of their land and how that land was to be transferred to whites banner argues that these differences were not due to any deliberate land policy created in london or washington rather the decisions were made locally by settlers and colonial officials and were based on factors peculiar to each colony such as whether the local indigenous people were agriculturalists and what level of political organization they had attained these differences loom very large now perhaps even larger than they did in the nineteenth century because they continue to influence the course of litigation and political struggle between indigenous people and whites over claims to land and other resources possessing the pacific is an original and broadly conceived study of how colonial struggles over land still shape the relations between whites and indigenous people throughout much of the world
